The commentary to DiLorenzo's talk is produced exclusively for Philosophyinsights.
In this video, Professor Tom DiLorenzo, an economics professor with 32 years of experience — including nearly three decades at Loyola University. He talks about how leftists switched from economic socialism to cultural marxism and how this affected education, especially at universities. Recorded at the Mises Circle in Dallas-Fort Worth on 3 October 2015.
Full talk licenced under creative common: • How Universities Silence Truth—And What We...

McCarthy's methods may have been flawed, but his alarm about Marxism was completely justified.

I think it worth remembering that it was Columbia university that gave a home to the Frankfurt School when they fled Nazi Germany from which to infiltrate and subvert universities across our nation. The Frankfurt School was a Marxist think tank that endlessly belabored the central question of "How shall we bring down western civilization?" Do not imagine that they ever went away. They are as active as ever in higher education and energetically spreading cultural Marxist rot to this day, and Columbia university has not changed it's colors either.

Remember in the 1990s when everyone was told "it can't happen here" as it was happening? The 'give me one generation' generation happened generations ago.

Thank you - as a retired brown engineer who was educated in N. America, I was deeply troubled by how quickly and deeply DEI had became embedded as a key criterion in the evaluation of grant applications and job applicants. Merit no longer mattered. I am proud to have had the privilege to work and contribute to the growth of my adopted Nation simply because of my work ethic and ability and not my ethnicity. Framing the issue in the wider political context as you have done makes absolute sense.
